

<https://www.nationalheraldindia.com/opinion/is-reservation-an-attack-on-merit>

OPINION

Reservation as an attack on 'merit' (or why India lags behind)

This truism that their rightful places are 'stolen' by Dalits and Adivasis is universally accepted by India's elite. It made for a disappointing talk at a Bengaluru school

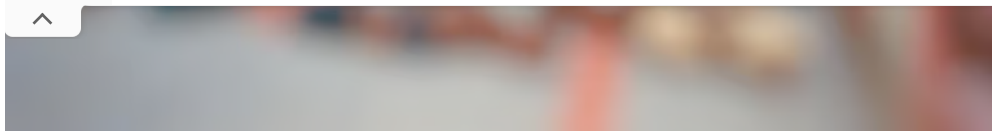

ADVERTISEMENT

Editors' Picks

These dargahs defy hate with Diwali

Around 50 Dalit students were thrown out of a school because upper-caste parents objected in April 2023

Aakar Patel ·

Published: 27 Oct 2024 at 4:10 PM

Let's discuss this thing called 'merit'.

The British middle class is 60 per cent of the population. The working class, the set of people employed in (mostly manual?) labour and other blue-collar work, is 14 per cent.

In India, the so-called middle class is a statistical blip. Statisticians sometimes speak of a +/-2 per cent margin of error in numbers. Such an error would wipe out the entire Indian 'middle class'. And yet, it is the most dominant and visible set of our population.

spike ahead of state polls in November

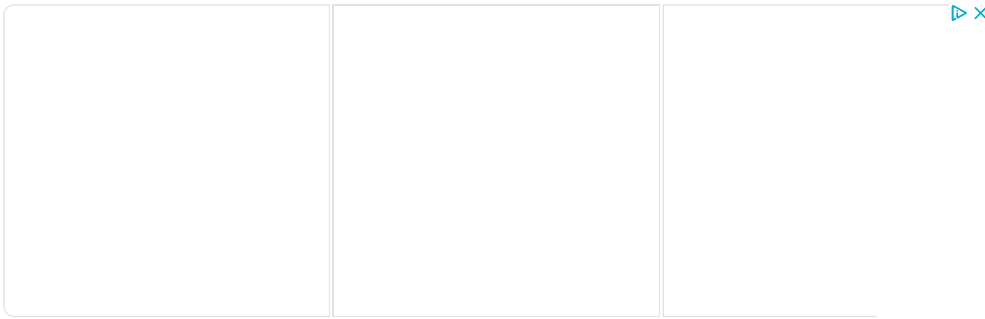

Harris or Trump: Still anybody's guess

In by-poll season, Bahraich reveals the BJP template

ADVERTISEMENT

Grote uitverkoop op Temu
Temu

It is this 'middle class' that controls the media, which is locked into it because it survives on advertising. What you and I consume pays the media. So it is not surprising that media content is focused on us, the 3 per cent, and not the many.

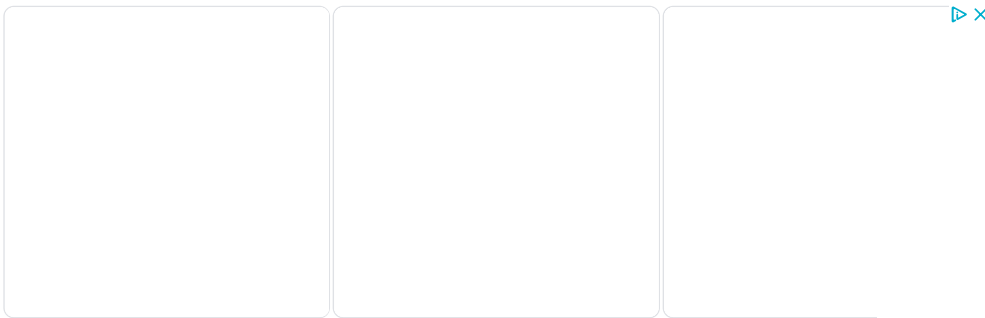

Dalits (23 crore), Adivasis (11 crore) and Muslims (20 crore) make up nearly 40 per cent of India's population. How much representation do they have in our economy, in our political power structure and in our media?

An Oxfam study in India, conducted between October 2018 and March 2019, found that 106 of 121 newsroom leadership positions were occupied by the upper castes. Three out of every four anchors facilitating debates (among a total of 40 anchors in Hindi channels and 47 in English channels) are upper-caste. Not one was Dalit or Adivasi. News channels draw the majority of their panellists from the upper castes as well, for over 70 per cent of their primetime debate shows. No more than 5 per cent of all articles in English newspapers are written by Dalits and Adivasis. Only 10 of the 972 articles featured on the cover pages of the 12 magazines studied were about issues related to caste.

Also Read: Dalits, Adivasis missing from Indian news media, upper castes dominant

Yet the reservations are the undoing of 'merit', is universally accepted by India's elite.

Stories with headlines such as 'Over 60 per cent OBC, SC positions vacant in IIMs' debunks this belief. More than 90 per cent of the posts of professor reserved for Adivasis in universities are not filled. Of over 6,000 vacancies in 42 universities, 75 per cent are those in reserved categories.

Grote uitverkoop op Temu
Temu

Even our institutions of learning, where reservation is legally mandated, are uncomfortable with Dalit and Adivasi faculty. They need the rest of us to show solidarity with them. This was the issue I touched upon briefly in a talk once at an elite Bengaluru school.

The idea I spoke on is that we are privileged and that it is incumbent upon us to recognise that and to act towards changing it. If we mean to be good Indians and good patriots, the most important contribution we can make is our own participation in its improvement. We can set aside some of our privilege and give it to those who do not have it.

Our Constitution tells us India is a society of equality, liberty and fraternity; but it cannot be the responsibility of the government or of political parties alone to hold space for these values. They must be held by us, the citizenry. We could cede some of our space to those less fortunate purely because of an accident of birth and willingly give them reservation.

This did not go down well at that school. The students were hostile to the idea. They felt they had earned their position in life and their place in the school through their merit. If others had not, this was not their concern. Even the parents were angered by the idea of reservation. There was unanimity among the audience — and I would call it a consensus — that reservation was bad and that they, the individuals in this school, were unconnected to any notion of privilege.

Also Read: We will think of scrapping reservation when India is fair place: Rahul Gandhi

ADVERTISEMENT

I was disappointed, of course, but not surprised. This is who we are as a society. The school could not be expected to be very different from the society that had produced it.

Grote uitverkoop op Temu
Temu

Would the audience — and the children in it, especially — have continued to hold these views if they had been better acquainted with the reality of India and with the data? I do not think so. We are all humans, and fraternity is at the heart of humanity. If they had known how things really were, they would have a different opinion of other Indians, one arising out of empathy. But a talk is not a book, and it is not possible to communicate something of the magnitude of what was being attempted to be communicated in a 30-minute lecture.

My intervention was not meaningful: I left the children and their parents knowing nothing more than what they had already known.

Also Read: Narrow political agendas are further marginalising vulnerable people: UN human rights chief

It is because we have become inured to poverty, deprivation and marginalisation that we can continue to ignore it while still assuming that India will rise to become a great power. The reality is that the vast majority of its population alive today will die in poverty or destitution.

Change will come to India, of course — it comes to all societies in time. But we can accelerate it now. Until we do, crores will continue to suffer in a nation whose defence spending is four times that of health. Whose arms and weapons spending is five times that on education. Where a bullet train will soon speed past slums.

This current prioritisation is the result of the stranglehold that the upper class — ourselves — has on the polity in India. So, it is incumbent on us to try and change it. And the most effective way to change our world is by investing time in learning and finding out about the world we live in, and communicating and spreading that knowledge to others.

Views are personal

Follow us on: Facebook, Twitter, Google News, Instagram

Join our official telegram channel (@nationalherald) and stay updated with the latest headlines

ADVERTISEMENT

Dalits reservation middle class Adivasis Indian media caste discrimination

1 Comment(s)

Electric Bike Prices In 2024 Might Surprise You!

Explore Electric Bike | Search Ads | Sponsored

Learn More

Senior Singles Connection

Share your feelings and emotions with someone.

Wingtalks | Sponsored

Read More

Looking for a soulmate!

Share your feelings and emotions with someone.

Koreadates | Sponsored

Read More

Not a typical dating platform

Share your feelings and emotions with someone.

Aslavibe | Sponsored

Read More

Learn about hotel management diploma

goodbrook.co | Sponsored

They were so beautiful before; now look at them; number 10 will shock you

Investractor | Sponsored

SHO, others booked on murder charge after police custody death in Lucknow

Second reported custodial death in Lucknow in last 16 days, Akhilesh Yadav, Priyanka Gandhi Vadra condemn government

National Herald